

Integrated Project Management

7 – 8 – 9 December 2010

Context For more than 25 years already, Stanwick supports companies in developing a project-oriented organization and in introducing a project based way of working. Additionally, we coach project leaders/managers in successfully executing projects. Our experience tells us that an integrated approach of projects from a planning, commitment and management perspective is a critical success factor for profitable projects. These 3 elements make up the theme for this open course.

Purpose This course has three objectives:

- transfer of a concept to successfully execute projects in a complex, global and virtual environment
- gain insights into the preconditions to develop a project friendly environment
- translate the learning points to the work environment of the participants

Target Group

- Project leaders/managers and project team/staff members
- Project coordinators
- Project sponsors and project owners
- Everyone involved in working in a (global / virtual) project environment

Program We focus on the integration of the management, the behavioral and the technical component of Project Management. The following topics are discussed extensively:

- Building a Project Oriented Organization (incl. assessment tool).
- Introduction to Program and Portfolio Management.
- Project Management Methodology based on the PMBOK® global standard.
- Interpersonal dynamics in projects.
- Creating the necessary energy in the project environment.
- Intercultural Project Management (IPM): managing virtual, global project teams.
- Expert tips concerning successful project management.

Our Approach

- We alternate theory with interactive case studies, exercises and work with the participants' experiences and questions.
- The work session will be complemented with a real-life testimony on Wednesday evening about "The Contemporary Challenges of Project Leaders/Managers"
- All participants will be contacted personally to map the project context in which they work together with their individual learning needs.
